

S18 P4 3-DI
BRIAN CAMENKER
84 STANFORD ST
AUBURNDALE MA 02466-11

Chief Justices Margaret Marshall and Suzanne DeVecchio Must Resign

'Gay Marriage' lawsuit leaves them no choice; they are not impartial jurists. p. 10

Massachusetts Libraries Continue Bad Sex Advice to Children

Still promoting anonymous sex site from Chicago. p. 16

The Massachusetts News

Vol. 2, No. 12

May 2001

$25 per year

NON PROFIT
ORG.
U.S. Postage Paid
Brookton, MA

SIGHTINGS

Globe Shielding Chief Justice Marshall

A firewall is being placed around Chief Justice Margaret Marshall by the Boston Globe because of the "gay marriage" case. She's in serious trouble because she has already indicated that she favors the suit.

The Globe is protecting her because her husband is the chief political writer for the New York Times which owns the Globe. Therefore, the Globe planted a story on April 19 about whether Atty. Gen. Tom Reilly should represent the Commonwealth in the case inasmuch as he has backed homosexual measures publicly in the last two years. If the Globe can get the discussion centering around Reilly, they can avoid any mention of Marshall.

It is Justice Marshall (and Chief Justice Suzanne DeVecchio of the Superior Court where the case will be heard) about whom citizens are concerned. It is Marshall and other judges who will be imposing their will upon unsuspecting citizens, not the Attorney General.

News Analysis

Struggle Over Cellucci Was Historic

Politicians in Washington and Boston Try to Understand Its Implications

What has changed in Massachusetts – and Washington – as a result of the struggle by Paul Cellucci to become Ambassador to Canada?

National Level -

A surprised President Bush had to intervene personally at the last moment. He made a hurried telephone call to the Senate on Cellucci's behalf on Thursday, April 5.

The President had discovered that the people of the country do care, passionately, about what is being taught to their children about homosexuality.

Many wonder if Bush was ever informed by his staff of the full extent of the unhappiness across the entire nation because of the Cellucci appointment. They question whether his chief of staff, Senators Kerry (left) and Kennedy (right) tried to smooth over Paul Cellucci's problems in Washington, but it took a personal call from the President before his nomination was approved.

Andy Card, ever told him of the enormous uproar from family groups both here and in Canada.

This nomination is seen as a pivotal point about whether this President understands – as his father and Bob Dole did not – that he cannot be discourteous and ignore, so many people who are the base of his power.

Alan Keyes wrote an 1800-word piece as the event was in its final stages that, "Cellucci's presence in the Bush administration [will be] an ongoing rebuke to any moral conservatives who 'just happen to believe' that they can blindly trust this administration's judgment on the most important matters of public policy. If we relax our vigilance, anything is possible."

But the Publisher of Massachusetts News, J. Edward Pawlick, had a more positive spin. "I am sure the President is troubled by what he has learned. He is too good a man not to be troubled. He just does not have the lower staff people in place yet because of the delays he encountered as a result of the Florida debacle. I hope that the lack of adequate staff explains his problems last week."

Senators Were Perplexed

It was apparent to most observers that the U.S. Senate was totally perplexed by what was happening. They could not believe that

continued on page 21

News Analysis

Young Men

State Moves To Destroy Howard

Fistgate Is Repeated

is Marshall and other judges who will be imposing their will upon unsuspecting citizens, not the Attorney General.

Homosexual Activists Target Massachusetts

Homosexual activists from across the nation are targeting Massachusetts with money and assistance. They will be holding a four-day training session here in June. Two meetings are scheduled just to prepare for the session. Although they are concerned about the backlash as a result of Fistgate, the activists are upbeat. "The next few years present an opportunity to organize in Massachusetts as never before," they say.

The training sessions will be presented by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force from Washington. "To win at the ballot box or at the legislative level, we need to strengthen our grassroots organizing skills," said its Executive Director, Elizabeth Toledo.

Judge Maria Lopez Assigned to Fistgate Trial

You won't guess which "unbiased" judge has been assigned to the case against the whistleblowing parents who exposed Fistgate. It is none other than Maria Lopez, the wife of Boston Phoenix owner Steve Mindich who has gotten rich by promoting the homosexual lifestyle in his newspaper. His wife has been assigned to the suit against Brian Camenker and Scott Whiteman by a state employee who was teaching homosexual sex at Fistgate.

Judge Lopez is in trouble herself and is presently facing an impeachment action in the legislature because of the outrage about her sentencing a South Boston man to "house arrest" last year after he had kidnapped an 11-

continued on page 6

News Analysis

Young Men Cautioned About Getting Married

Judge Demonstrates that Wife Can Destroy Any Family at Her Whim

Catherine N. Newell was given a permanent, lifetime restraining order last month against her former husband, Kenneth Newell, by Judge Robert L. Langlois in Dedham Probate Court, even though the woman has been:

- ▶ On drugs,
- ▶ Diagnosed by the courts with serious psychological problems,
- ▶ Recommended for treatment in a hospital, and
- ▶ Made more than twenty false charges to police of violence by her former husband, the latest being on November 30, 2000.

continued on page 26

State Moves To Destroy Howard Family; Adoption Is Imminent

By Ed Oliver

Heidi Howard's hopes of getting her four-month-old baby, Jessica, back any time soon were dashed last month by Judge Robert Belmonte who continued the custody of the baby in DSS without listening to any testimony at all.

The baby was seized from the mother and her husband by the state on February 14 when the infant was two-months-old. The mother was shackled at the wrists and ankles and forced to climb stairs in the Lowell court. A hearing is required under state law within 72 hours.

Attorneys Chester Darling and

continued on page 26

Activists File Law Suit for 'Gay Marriage'

Justices Have Already Decided the Case

A lawsuit has been filed in Superior Court in Boston to require the state of Massachusetts to recognize homosexual marriage.

"This was a smart move by homosexual activists because they know they're losing the battle in public opinion," said Atty. J. Edward Pawlick, Publisher of Massachusetts News.

"They've been shocked to see the legislature poised to pass a Protection of Marriage Act, which would define marriage as a contract between one man and one woman. The activists are now trying to go around the legislature to the seven people on the Supreme Judicial Court who have already indicated that they are anxious to change the state Constitution and approve marriage for homosexuals."

Chief Justice Suzanne DelVecchio of the Superior Court, where the case will be tried, has also spoken publicly in favor of such a suit.

"The judges in this case are not the impartial jurists that are supposed to preside in a courtroom," said Atty. Pawlick.

The suit was filed on April 11 by

continued on page 24

Fistgate Is Repeated

By Ed Oliver

Fistgate was held again this year on March 24 in the same building at Tufts University with the same message about how to practice homosexual sex.

Kits of plastic gloves intended for "fisting" and oral sex were distributed at Planned Parenthood's table in the lobby.

More students attended this year. Out of approximately 650 attendees, about 400 of those were students.

Public funds were used for the event with at least two school buses transporting students from Methuen High School and Marblehead Public Schools. Adam Glick, Conference Coordinator, said he did not know how the buses were paid for. Other children were transported by public school teachers in private cars.

The private homosexual sponsor, GLSEN, is given state funds for

This school bus from Methuen is one example of public money spent at Fistgate II.

smoothly.

The Boston Globe gave the official spin about the conference in its Sunday edition the day after under the headline, "Alert against threats to gay teens." The first paragraph repeated the canard about suicide and safety in schools. The conference, said the Globe, was merely an attempt to overcome homophobia.

Children in town of Harvard targeted for gay agenda. See page 3.

many purposes and does not publicly report on how the money is spent.

There was a heightened sense of security this year with many Tufts campus police being highly visible in order to stop parents from seeing what occurred at the conference.

Although Tufts University was able to claim ignorance about the event last year, they obviously became complicit this year when they welcomed the conference back. They provided the security muscle to keep the strategy sessions and indoctrination of the children running

Some Attempts at Change

Obviously, the conference was stung by last year's bad publicity and tried to avoid that this year. But it was only an attempt at window dressing said one participant. Some of the differences were:

▶ A ban on tape recorders and cameras, with frequent reminders.

▶ The press was not allowed to sit in on any of the workshops or interview students. Assistant Coordinator Susan McCray and the Tufts campus police removed this reporter from a workshop.

▶ There were half as many information display tables there this year with few children manning them.

▶ The pages of the "Teach Out"

continued on page

Fistgate Is Repeated With Plastic Gloves for Fisting

continued from page 1

program booklet this year lacked the endorsement it had last year from Mass. Department of Education Commissioner David P. Driscoll. Still, GLSEN tried to give the conference the appearance of official sanction by including welcoming messages from two homosexual legislators – Congressman Barney Frank and State Senator Cheryl Jacques.

► The fallout from last year's conference inspired one workshop this year titled: "A Look At Last Year's Setbacks In MA, What We have Learned and How We Can Move Forward."

► This year's final performance was substantially cleaned up. Gone were the crude jokes and sexual innuendo. The play, which was about "homophobia," consisted entirely of professional adult actors rather than children.

Security Was High

Conference Coordinators Adam Glick and McCray stated that the press wasn't allowed into the workshops when they and the campus police forced this reporter to leave. When asked why, they said it makes the participants uncomfortable. When asked what it was that would make the participants uncomfortable, they did not answer.

At the start of the day when I reported to the press registration desk, I was given a press kit and a sticker by a teenager and told no cameras or recording equipment were allowed. I was not even asked to register. I wasn't told the workshops were restricted. When I explained this to Glick, I was told cy." It continued that "backsliding" is now evident in areas such as parent notification policy, teacher certification standards, students rights regulations, and HIV/AIDS parameters. The workshop aimed to explore strategic responses to such "challenges."

It is interesting to note that the presenters of this particular workshop planned to mention Massachusetts News' role in "setting back" the gay agenda in the schools. They had issues of the paper on hand in the classroom. It was to this particular workshop that MassNews was refused entrance.

Taxpayer Funded

When asked if any of this was taxpayer funded, Glick said no public funds were used for the event. He said it was paid for entirely by donations and registration fees. There are many obvious questions about the funding including Glick's salary, but Glick would not answer them. The student participants were obviously recruited through the public schools and their teachers. The shroud of secrecy aroused suspicion.

Glick said no professional development points would be awarded to teachers for attending because there weren't enough hours. However, GLSEN provided a yellow certificate of completion which says the teacher participated in professional development activities for 6.0 hours.

Keynote Speaker Promotes Sexual Activity

The keynote speaker in the morning was the executive producer

Planned Parenthood Distributes Kits for Fisting

Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts distributed kits for fisting and oral sex. They contained a single plastic glove, a package of K-Y lubricant and instructions on how to make a "dental dam" out of the material.

The instructions explained how to cut up the glove with scissors until all that remains is a rubber rectangle with the "thumb" portion protruding from the middle. "Use the thumb space for your tongue," say the directions.

The label on the ziplocked package says, "protects against STD's," and bears the Planned Parenthood logo and phone number.

GLSEN (Gay Lesbian and Straight Education Network) got into trouble last year for hosting a workshop that gave young teens explicit how-to instructions on homosexual sex practices such as "fisting." The ensuing scandal was subsequently dubbed "Fistgate."

Regarding "dental dams," Dr. John Diggs, a specialist in internal medicine who lectures about STDs, said that the kits create a false sense of security. "I've written a brochure about this whole thing," he said. "The way I describe it is, I ask 'How many people want to take a bite of a sandwich without taking the wrapper off?' 'How many people want to suck on balloons?' Nobody does."

Diggs said when you encourage kids to use such a barrier by saying it is "safe," then when it comes time for them to use it, they find they don't like it and throw it aside. Because they are already in an aroused condition they continue on and increase the chances of spreading STD's orally like syphilis, gonorrhea, chlamydia, HIV, human papilloma virus and hepatitis B.

A further sampling of literature available to the children included a brochure titled "Be Yourself," published by the activist group, PFLAG. It purported to answer questions for "gay, lesbian and bisexual youth." It states, "Most people have some attraction to the same sex during their lives," citing the discredited Dr. Alfred Kinsey as its source. It also stated: "Being gay is as natural, normal and healthy as being straight."

A pamphlet put out by the left-wing "Political Research Associates," titled "The 'Ex' Files," hysterically brands the ex-gay movement, "A New Threat to Democracy and Diversity." The brochure offers information on how to "challenge" those who say they are psychologically or spiritually healed of the homosexuality disorder, or who no longer choose to practice homosexual sex.

Several issues of a magazine called "Radical Teacher" were also available at an information table. A small sign on the table announced: "Coming May 2001, K-12 Radical Methods."

A perusal of one particular gay-themed issue of "Radical Teacher" revealed articles titled, "Strange Bedfellows. Thoughts on the Bans Against Faculty-Student Sexual Relations and How They Can Hurt Us," and "Teaching Outside the Curriculum: Guerilla Sex Education and the Public Schools."

Workshops

Some workshop titles at Fistgate II were:

► "Addressing GLBT [Gay, Lesbian, BI-Sexual, Transgender] issues in Pre-Schools, Daycare and Kindergartens: A Networking Summit and a Chance to Share Experiences."

► "Gay Rights 101, Incorporating the Basics of the Gay Rights Movement Into Your U.S. History Curriculum."

explained this to Glick, I was told that even if I registered as the press, I could only have access to the display tables, lunch, and the performance and awards ceremony.

The description of the workshop, "Last Year's Setback," said in part, "Over the past year, one of the nation's most successful safe schools programs for GLBT youth has been beset by attacks from reactionary forces both inside and outside the public education bureaucraand head writer of the TV show "Dawson's Creek," Greg Berlanti.

Berlanti was obviously there to inspire the kids as a young, successful gay role model. It soon became apparent during his speech that his success hinged not on his talent, but because he pushed to include homosexuality in his work, which was rewarded by those who control the levers of popular culture.

The approximately 400 kids were treated to short film clips of

- ▶ "Gay Rights 101: Incorporating the Basics of the Gay Rights Movement Into your World History Curriculum."
- ▶ "From Lesbos to Stonewall: Including the History of GLBT Individuals in a HS or Middle School World History Curriculum."
- ▶ "Incorporating GLBT Inclusive Literature in the High School English Curriculum."
- "Using the Arts to Express and Explore GLBT Issues In Your School."
- "Homophobia in School Athletics."

Berlanti's "work."

One clip showed two male baseball players flirting on the ball field. Another showed two young men meeting at a dance. One of the men said to the other, "You're so out, so fun." They then kissed passionately. After that, they went off to dance together. Another clip showed an emotional scene where a boy told his father he is homosexual. The father would not accept it, and the scene ended with the father getting thrown out of the house by the son as though the father had a problem. ☹

Fistgate II Almost Canceled Because of Fallout

Department of Education Employee Still Seeks 'Explicit Education'

By Ed Oliver

Massachusetts News has learned that GLSEN had a lot of trouble finding a site this year for its Fistgate II conference.

It appears as though Tufts University forced the homosexual activists at GLSEN to make some changes as a condition for allowing them to use a college building.

Among the changes was a ban on sexually explicit workshops as well as demonstrations at exhibition tables. This may be the reason there were only half as many exhibitors at the conference this year.

But despite the new policy, Planned Parenthood of Massachusetts distributed free "fisting/oral sex kits" for youngsters to take home.

In a revealing letter written shortly before the conference, an official from the state's Department of Education, Kim Westheimer, seemed disappointed about GLSEN's new policy barring explicit sex instruction.

In the March 20, 2001 letter, Westheimer, who works for the DOE's "Safe Schools Program for Gay and Lesbian Students" wrote, "[U]p until the last minute it looked like GLSEN wasn't going to have a conference at all. Sites they tried to obtain were unwilling to host the conference fearing negative publicity because of what happened last year.

A picket stands outside the building at Tufts where Fistgate was repeated this year.

"It might be possible that the only way GLSEN could host the conference at Tufts was to agree to stipulations about materials. I wouldn't want to make any assumptions about GLSEN's actions without asking organizers what went into their decision-making. People may agree or disagree with the decision to have the conference without providing explicit AIDS/HIV education. But to cancel the conference would have also sent a negative message to young people."

The Department of Education employee continued, "Our challenge as a community is to find ways for explicit education to take place as well."

The Westheimer language which supports "explicit" sex education belies the DOE's official distancing from what went on last year at Fistgate. Interestingly, at the particular workshop last year which was tape-recorded by the Parents' Rights Coalition (PRC) and where kids were given explicit homosexual instruction on fisting and other sexual practices, 55 minutes passed before there was any mention of AIDS/HIV.

Westheimer wrote, "When PRC launched their campaign against GLBT youth last year, GLSEN Boston and Wallace Bachman in particular were among the few organizations or individuals who spoke up publicly against PRC, against DOE firing, and in support of providing AIDS/HIV and sexuality education for GLBT youth. Not many organizations spoke out in support of GLSEN or the DOE employees who conducted the workshop."

Two DOE employees were fired last year for teaching children how to perform dangerous homosexual sex acts such as "fisting." The letter from Westheimer supports the contention of fired employee Margot Abels, who is suing the Department of Education, that she had the support of the DOE in what she taught the kids and she was made a scapegoat.

At least one exhibitor stayed away from this year's conference because of the new GLSEN policy. In a March 16 letter to GLSEN, Rob Woronoff, the Director of GLBT Services and Peer Programs for "The Home for Little Wanderers," explained why his group declined GLSEN's invitation to set up a display this year. His letter shows that both GLSEN

continued on page 25

shop was "Gay Rights 101: Incorporating the Basics of the Gay Rights Movement Into Your U.S. History Curriculum."

Doherty told attendees that she is concerned about how the students and the parents at her school in Harvard will respond. She has already taught the subject to the Gay/Straight Alliance, of which she is the advisor. She said they liked it.

In the workshop at Fistgate II, Doherty lectured, showed film clips and provided the following outline of the gay rights lessons that she will be giving to her class.

► The cold war years are portrayed as the dark ages of ignorance and repression. Doherty casts homosexuals as a persecuted minority harassed by President Eisenhower, the federal govern-associations, or those who practice "sexual perversion."

► Local police were encouraged by the example of the federal government to "harass gay citizens" according to Doherty. Examples of harassment were vice officers regularly raiding gay bars, "sometimes arresting dozens of men and women on a single night."

► Doherty recommended using the black civil rights movement of the sixties as a platform to teach about the homosexual movement. She suggested one way to introduce homosexuals into a U.S. history class would be to ask students, "What other groups were energized by the civil rights movement?"

Doherty said there are lots of parallels to the civil rights movement you could draw such as, printed handout.

► According to Doherty, the 1969 "Stonewall Riots" were the beginning of the modern gay rights movement. In that incident, the police raided a Greenwich Village gay bar on a charge of selling alcohol without a license. Three nights of rioting ensued. Doherty said you can compare it to Rosa Parks refusing to give up her seat on the bus.

Doherty suggested showing to students video clips from "Before Stonewall" and its companion video "After Stonewall." One clip shows a middle-aged man being interviewed on camera while wearing a blue suit and a woman's flowery sunbonnet. Doherty, with a straight face, said the kids would probably snicker and giggle at that clip and it might have to be More video clips show homosexuals proudly flaunting their homosexuality in parades after the Stonewall rebellion, "I'm gay; I'm proud." Doherty admitted that teaching about Stonewall is controversial but said it is an important turning point in the "Gay Liberation Movement" that kids should learn about.

► Just so the kids aren't given an incomplete gay history lesson, Doherty advised in her informational handout, "Students should be aware that there is a history of gay liberation movements, both in the U.S. and abroad, prior to the 1960's, but that those movements were smaller and not as well known."

Doherty teaches that the gay liberation movement led to many changes such as: half the states

Association eliminated homosexuality from its list of disorders, in 1975 the Civil Service Commission eliminated the ban on the employment of homosexuals in most federal jobs, and openly gay candidates ran for office and won.

According to Doherty, those well known opponents of homosexuality who worked to "slow the progress" of the gay movement included Anita Bryant, Senator Jesse Helms, and "fundamentalist minister" Jerry Falwell.

Doherty suggested asking students "how does this struggle continue?" She said there are more than enough current events to create a conversation.

Calls by Massachusetts News to the Bromfield School principal and the head of the social studies department were not returned.

Homosexual Lawyers Try to Hide What Happened at Fistgate

Case Involving 'Whistleblower' Parents Is Heading for Trial

The homosexual teacher who is suing the parents who taped Fistgate last year is trying to conceal what occurred at that scandal.

Her lawyers have asked the judge for a Protective Order to stop the parents from questioning her about what she and others taught the students. The tape recording, which was made by the parents, showed that she and others taught "fisting," oral sex and other homosexual acts.

When advised that the teacher was planning to seek an order, the attorney for the parents, Chester Darling, replied in a letter that he was in receipt of their "astounding letter" in which they "threaten" to seek a Protective Order.

Darling said he could understand their desire to hide the facts.

"In my opinion, your client was involved in the commission of a crime, the dissemination of harmful material to minor children," he wrote.

Darling has made it clear that he intends to argue before the court that his clients had a duty under the law to report this crime to the authorities.

He cited a U.S. Supreme Court case which states that the failure to report criminal behavior "remains a badge of irresponsible citizenship."

Darling also made a pointed reference to the fact that the lawyers for the plaintiff are receiving a portion of their salaries and other money from the Commonwealth and other public sources. This occurs because they are employees of GLAD (Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders) which is a "poverty lawyer" organization which receives money from the Supreme Judicial Court and others.

Atty. Darling wrote, "Don't you appreciate that if [the court rules in my favor and] I recover attorneys' fees for responding to your ... assertions, that the citizens of Massachusetts are going to pay the bill and your salary?"

In his original letter to Atty. Darling, the lawyer from GLAD, Bennett Klein, wrote that, "It is my position that questions relating to the content or subject matter of the workshop, the educational or pedagogical methods underlying the workshop, or the reasons that the workshop was structured and conducted as it was, are not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence."

Not the Only Transgression of Margaret Marshall

The above violations of judicial conduct are not the only transgressions of Chief Justice Margaret Marshall.

An avowed feminist, she believes there must be controversy between the sexes. When addressing a group of women at the "Women 2000" conference in Worcester last fall, she said their goal must be to elect "women and those who are interested in the interests of women" if they are going to get the society they want.

She also noted that the Democrats, and not the Republicans, are their friends. She told the women in Worcester that four of the seven justices then serving on the SJC were women and she quickly added, "Three of the women were appointed by Republican governors. I think it means that women have faced enormous obstacles, but they have also been supported in different degrees from all kinds of places, expected and unexpected." She obviously did not believe that Republicans could be nice to women.

This Chief Justice was outspoken in her belief in abortion and gun control. She noted that until the sixties, there hadn't been a lot of notice of the courts by the citizens. Then, she stated, "Partly through certain decisions, like Brown v. Board of Education, like Roe v. Wade, like the school gun cases," the citizens came to appreciate the importance of the Court. She emphasized that the President can only nominate, subject to approval by the Senate. We have to elect people to the Senate who will act as we want, she said. "This is the hard work of democracy. You can't look at it and say, 'This president is going to put that judge on'" and give us what we want. Therefore, she advised all the women present to consider their votes for senator most carefully.

Margaret Marshall is seen on November 1, 1999, during her first day as Chief Justice on the state's highest court. Justice Ruth Abrams is at left.

She did not admonish everyone that the reason for voting was to help their country. She advised the women attendees that "the gender revolution" will continue only if women "exercise your right to vote at every opportunity that you have."

This person is obviously not an impartial judge who considers a case carefully before she makes a decision. She is a political animal who already has her agendas.

What Should Gov. Swift Do About Fistgate?

What should Gov. Swift do about Fistgates I and II?

Is there anything the Governor can do to satisfy those pesty, concerned parents who threatened Paul Cellucci's appointment to Canada?

It's very simple. All she has to do is to stop the "indoctrination" of children and begin "teaching" them. We all know what the difference is.

If the Governor believes that homosexuality is a subject that must be taught in every school in the state, she should be sure that all the different sides are being presented to the children. She could show her good faith by doing the following.

- Hire medical doctors (probably on a part-time basis) to teach the risks of homosexuality to the students at every school.
- Hire former homosexuals who are now heterosexual and who believe that homosexuals can and do change. The Governor may not agree with them, but how can she deny their existence?
- Get the famous psychiatrist, Dr. Robert Spitzer, who spearheaded the fight in 1973 to remove homosexuality from the list of mental disorders of the American Psychiatric Association. Have him come from New York and talk to Massachusetts teachers about his new findings that homosexuals can change.

- Require gay/straight alliances to teach all sides of the subject.

Since most conservatives are also libertarians, one must wonder whether the Weld/Cellucci approach of making this a subject of state control is appropriate. The best answer is to give control back to the parents where it belongs. However, inasmuch as the State has taken control, the Governor is required to show good faith by making it a real learning experience.

The lessons of Fistgates I and II appear to be that the homosexual activists who are in charge have betrayed our trust by not teaching about "safety" and "suicide" and have, instead, turned this into a graphic sexual introduction for vulnerable teenagers.

They may not be hurting your child directly as far as you can see, but it is certainly damaging our society. If only our new Governor realizes that.

to 888-313-5525. Comments about the quality of subscriber services should be made to the editorial offices.

Not for Profit

Massachusetts News is a 501(c)(3) organization and all contributions above the cost of a subscription are tax-deductible.

Back Issues

Back copies of the print edition are available at $2/copy plus a $3 handling charge for the entire order regardless of the number of copies. Please send these orders to Massachusetts News, Subscriber Services, PO Box 3000, Denville, NJ 07834-3000 or call 888-313-5525.

Editorial Offices

Editorial offices:
P.O. Box 812844
Wellesley, MA 02482
Telephone: 781-239-3305
Fax: 781-239-1193
E-Mail: editor@massnews.com

Copyright ©2000 Massachusetts News, Inc.
Photocopying and data processing storage of all or any part of this issue may not be made without prior written consent.
Postage paid at Ashland, MA and Brockton, MA.

Subscribe Today!

888-313-5525

This number is for paid subscribers only. The operators have no knowledge regarding complimentary copies.

The Massachusetts News